Overview

“External” funding refers to scholarships, grants, fellowships, and loans available to students from sources other than the Harvard Graduate School of Education.

For internal funding sources, please visit the HGSE Financial Aid website and the Harvard University Committee on General Scholarships website.

The following list contains a sample of external funding sources that may interest students pursuing their Ed.M. at HGSE. Students should visit the scholarship sponsor’s website for the most up-to-date information on deadlines and application requirements.

This list is in no way exhaustive, but it shows a sample of awards that are available for graduate students to apply for. Deadlines for applications are provided when available, but students should visit the scholarship website for the most accurate information on application deadlines.

Student-Specific Scholarships

Student-specific scholarships are scholarships available to students who satisfy certain criteria. Most student-specific scholarships are for under-represented populations, but some are for students who satisfy certain membership requirements (e.g., religious affiliations) or identifying characteristics (e.g., ethnicity).

A great starting point in searching for external scholarships is narrowly focusing on individual social and professional networks, such as civic organizations, religious affiliations, employer-based programs, undergraduate alumni organizations, etc.

The following categories represent a portion of student-specific scholarships available, which can hopefully help in your search for external funding.
